Quick Review 2020 & 21

Unless you were around for polio TB or Spanish Flu, the pandemic is a new experience. That could be one reason it was ignored so long. However, we know there were other reasons as well.

Many families suffered and grieved. Businesses closed and we lost physical connections for several months.

There also were achievements and exciting adventures as we discovered that "necessity is the mother of invention." We need to keep what works and learn from our mishaps.

Zoom became a household word. Communication via technology was important and new and old friends were discovered. We had 6-8 members participate on ZOOM that we had not seen for many months.

DSC meetings are announced by BRAVO Miami Valley and reviewed monthly in ATA Topical Times. Members across the country and the world participated on-line regardless of exact location.

Several new members joined after seeing a ZOOM meeting. FaceBook, ZOOM, the internet are the vehicles of the future if we want to get our voice out. The Virtual Stamp Club is an excellent example of enjoying stamp collecting with limited or in person contacts.

A valuable partnership was established with Greenville Public Library. The library received boxes of materials from the world renowned Vakeck Kennel. DSC Member Carol Costa worked with library members in creating a wonderful exhibit for their display.

Over the year six different members wrote articles for the newsletter. Four produced philatelic presentations at club meetings. Five programs were member participation on numerous philatelic and non-philatelic topics.

The DSC President Mike Komiensky won the APS National Volunteer award.

AIRPEX'2021 was a success following COVID-19 health rules and practices. Within the year the club sponsored six live auctions and one member bourse.

In spite of confusing national news and warnings about physical contact, DSC was active, alive and well.

We remember with our hearts members that we lost during the year.

We look forward to another exciting year—2022

This program features three mini-topic collectors. Susan Jones will share her collection on Maria Sibylla Merian, a woman who changed 17th century science with her detailed studies of insects and her ground-breaking botanical illustrations. Jennifer Miller will delight our inner child with her Winnie the Pooh on stamps and covers, and Michele Bresso will provide a historical look at Saint Bernard's as rescue dogs starting in 18th century Switzerland.

Leaders Commemorated on Early Irish Postage Stamps

By Douglas Files

Commodore John Barry, Founder of the U.S. Navy

Commodore John Barry

John Barry was born in 1745 in Wexford, Ireland, the eldest son in a poor Catholic family. At that time the English banned Irish Catholics from practicing their religion, owning land or speaking their native Gaelic tongue. The Irish are no strangers to difficulties, of course, but these restrictions rankled. Still, the people made their way as best they could.

Young John learned seamanship from an uncle with a fishing boat. At age 10 he became a cabin boy on a merchant ship. His wages were meager but the extra money helped feed his family. Five years later he emigrated to America, though he still spent much of his time at sea. Promoted from cabin boy to mate, by age 21 he earned his first command. It was only a small schooner with a crew of five but Barry made many trips to the Barbados in charge of this vessel.

Established as a "captain" he got married and settled with his new wife in Philadelphia. Gradually he commanded larger and larger ships and by age 30 he was able to purchase a trading ship. During the 1770s several close family members died, including his parents and his wife.

This was the period when the American Revolution broke out. As a patriot and a senior mariner Barry volunteered to help form a Continental Navy. He sold his own ship to the Navy to help the fledgling organization get started. In December 1775 he was placed in command of the Lexington, the first officer named to command an American warship. Barry developed into a master strategist and was responsible for converting several difficult naval situations into victories. For example, in 1780 he commanded the Alliance to victory over two enemy ships.

After the war ended Barry captained a successful trade mission to China which greatly improved his financial situation. When George Washington became President he appointed the calm, thoughtful Barry to be the first commodore in the U.S. Navy. As the senior U.S. naval officer, he oversaw the building of several ships and helped to set standards for the new nation. One of the Navy's first challenges was to protect American shipping from piracy along the Barbary Coast and Barry helped plan this mission. Upon Barry's death in 1803 some called him the "Father of the American Navy", though others reserved the title for John Paul Jones, another captain of Celtic origins.

A 1956 set of two stamps celebrated the unveiling of a statue honoring Commodore Barry.

The statue was sculpted by W. Williams and the stamps were designed and engraved by H. Woyty-Wimmer. The 3 pence violet stamp is much more commonly found since 51 million were issued, compared to only 2 million of the higher-denomination 1 shilling 3 pence blue stamp.

Daniel O'Connell

Daniel O'Connell was an Irish patriot in the early 1800s whose contributions were rallying the population and gaining civil rights for Catholics. He became a hero to many Irish people and his legacy endures almost two centuries later.

Born in 1775 in the west of Ireland, his family was Catholic. This meant that young Daniel was not allowed to attend university in Ireland or England so he travelled to France to study. While there, the French Revolution took hold of the people and O'Connell fled the violence.

Passage of the Catholic Relief Acts finally made it possible for him to study law in Ireland and be admitted to the bar. Though he remained perpetually in debt, his reputation grew and he became one of the most sought-after lawyers in Ireland. In the 1820s he joined the Catholic Association and agitated for civil rights.

Later he was elected to represent County Clare, Ireland in the British Parliament, though he was delayed in being seated because he refused to swear that he was a Protestant – a requirement at that time.

In 1843 O'Connell helped organize a campaign to repeal the Act of Union which kept Ireland under English rule. The British arrested him for plotting conspiracy against the government, and the Act of Union was not passed. When the potato famine hit he pushed for relief for his countrymen, but to little avail. O'Connell died in 1847 and a statue to his memory was erected in the center of Dublin.

Dr. Douglas Hyde

Dr. Douglas Hyde as president on a 1943 stamp. Printed in photogravure by Irish Government Printers at Dublin Castle - irelandstamps.com Transferred from en.wikipedia.com to Commons by Urinomata using Commons Helper.

Born in 1860, Dr. Douglas Hyde was an academic, a politician and a strong supporter of the Irish Gaelic language. Hyde's family hailed from Cork, Ireland where his father was a Protestant religious leader. As a boy young Hyde was mesmerized by the sound of the Irish language spoken by older people around him. He began to study it on his own and at Trinity College, Dublin he expanded to also study French, Latin, Greek and Hebrew. At that time these Irish was looked upon as a low-status language, barely worth the attention of serious scholars. But he persevered in his studies. Pushing against prejudice, Hyde founded the Gaelic League in 1893 to encourage Irish people to study their ancient traditions as well as to promote the Irish language.

The Gaelic League gained members at a surprising pace. In fact Irish nationalism grew out of the Gaelic league and many young Republicans became politicized through this organization. Disturbed at the political trends in his cultural group, Hyde moved on and later returned to teach at University College Dublin. In 1938 Hyde was chosen to serve as the first president of Ireland, partly because the populace were certain he would not turn into a dictator. His presidency included the Second World War so it was a tumultuous time. He resigned once the war in Europe ended and he died in 1949 at 89 years old.

Two Douglas Hyde stamps were issued in 1943, a ½ pence green and a 2 ½ pence claret. These form an inexpensive set carrying a catalogue value of 5 euros for a mint set. First day covers are scarce and if they bear both stamps they catalogue at 60 euros.

Martin Luther King Jr. (1929 – 1968) was an American minister and activist who became spokesman of the American civil rights movement.

In 1964, King won the Nobel Peace Prize for combating racial inequality through nonviolent resistance. He expanded his focus to include opposition towards poverty, capitalism, and the Vietnam War.

In 1968, King was assassinated on April 4 in Memphis, TN. King was posthumously awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in 1977 and the Congressional Gold Medal in 2003.

In 1979 King was honored by the US Postal Service with a stamp as part of the Black Heritage series. Martin Luther King Jr. Day was established in 1971. The Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial on the National Mall in Washington, D.C., was dedicated in 2011.
